THE CHINA MAIL.

HONGKONG, TUESDAY, AUG. 24, 1869.

It is a report to which we recently gave currency, but a great change must have come over the mind of the Inspector of Maritime Customs. That some strong influence is at work with Mr Burlingame is pretty clearly evidenced by the silence which he has of late preserved in Europe, but we must confess our astonishment at hearing the rumour that Mr. Hart had gone so far as to recommend the stoppage of his salary.

Setting out with so much apprehension, Mr. Burlingame has been peculiarly unfortunate in the outcome of his expedition. Tired and fatigued in the United States to an extent almost unparalleled among the speech-loving citizens of the New World, he has the mortification of finding that his "treaty" is rejected by the very government that sent him forth; that his high-down descriptions of the good faith and desire for progress which, as he asserted, animated the Chinese Government (and to do him justice, we believe that he had bona fide believed himself into a partial adoption of those statements) are as distasteful to his employers as to Europeans and Americans resident in China generally. He has been rebuffed in France, ready enough to avail itself of the social exclusive of being pitted against boys in a quadrille, or to add Chinese autographs to its album collections, but politically wise to commit itself to no agreement which would neutralize its concessions in its hitherto obtained for its foreignists in China. Russia scarcely likely, in face of the protest made by her able Minister at Peking, to pour bail upon the hurt dignity of the envoy. Much as she desires the friendship of the United States she is scarcely likely to approve measures which result in the decrease of her prestige if carried out in their integrity.
The British Minister who is credited in well informed quarters, with having set in motion this gigantic chain, has been back upon his former ally and brother Minister in a most unmistakable way.
Altogether the prospects of the Burlingame embassy look as black as they can well be, so far as the interests of its members are concerned, and as bright for the future prospects of foreign policy in China as its opponents could have dared to hope. It is almost impossible that the rejection by the Peking authorities of the agreement made in the United States, the outspoken language of the British Minister, the unsuppressed sincerity with which Mr. Burlingame was received in Paris to explain the anomaly between his representations and the practices of the Chinese, and the records of outrages which have united upon the point of policy all journals published in China, can fail to awaken Lord Clarendon to the real position in which his suicidal policy has placed our interests.
A reaction must come sooner or later, and in proportion as it comes speedily will benefit accrue to foreigners.

One of the first questions which occur to the mind is, naturally, what lesson will be learned by the Chinese from the result of this attempt to hoodwink the Governments of the West? Much good or much evil may result. The Chinese allowed, under interested advice, to believe that they have consensated in making a further treaty agreement, unexpected by force, may simply decline to make any further attempts in the same direction. Their view of diplomatic intercourse was, evidently, that it was a useful engine for obtaining advantages from any Government more powerful than themselves. The idea of reciprocity had obviously never entered their minds. They may put the recent instructions of Lord Clarendon, as to referring all matters to Peking, into the scale against the failure of Mr. Burlingame to obtain anything worth the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars per annum; and content in their belief that we shall, at all events for the present, carry out our programme with honor; no matter how shameless their own conduct, may decide upon letting the future take care of itself. On the other hand, judicious and strong-minded counsel may convince them that a sham mission, involving a fraud upon the public in the very measures taken to appoint its members, a mission whose object is to arrest progress, is and must ever be a failure; that their only hope, if they would not see China disappear as an independent nation before the inevitable and inexorable law which in succession raised and destroyed empires since the world was created, lies in progress; judicious, slow, if they like, but progress and not regression. Much depends upon the foreign officials now in Peking as to which view will be accepted. The present year is a turning point in Chinese history; and upon the British Government and representatives especially does it devolve to ensure that its influence shall be for the best interests both of China and the world.

BARON VON GUMPACH ON THE PEKING COLLEGE.
We reprint below the first of a series of extracts from Baron von Gumpach's letter upon the Peking College. We do not think it necessary to copy the entire document, as much relates to the Baron's personal reputation as an astro-nomer only. The first paragraph touches upon this matter:

THE CHINA MAIL.

On my departure from Europe, in the autumn of 1868, my views had passed through the "paradoxical" stage, and just entered the next one. In all probability, they would now have been far on their way towards a final recognition, had I not been induced to come to this country, and to accept the Chair of Astronomy and Mathematics in a University which at the time had, and to this day has, no existence.
There are grave differences pending between Mr. Hart and myself relative to this projected University, and as the necessity may be forced upon me of submitting them to a legal decision, I wish to abstain from any remarks which could tend to prejudice that official in public opinion. The few additional words, for which I shall from your courtesy, claim space, are simply intended to indicate my position in connection with the institution in question, and the view which, from the first, I took of the conditions of its possible success.

Within a few weeks after my arrival, seeing how matters stood, I applied for advice to Sir Rutherford Alcock, and in his reply, as it happened, I decided upon staying, conditionally. A few days later the opportunity was offered to me by Mr.
Hart of submitting to him my conditions, in the shape of propositions, embodied in a letter, dated the 26th January 1867. They were, all of them, verbally accorded by him on his own part and that of the Chinese Government, and included the erection of a new observatory on a moderate scale, to be furnished with all the appliances of modern science, and comprehending besides the astronomical, a complete meteorological station, magnetic, barometrical, an extensive library, a printing press, and a mechanical workshop, the primary cost of which, exclusive of building and incidental expenses, I had estimated at £12,000. The disposal of the observatory was confided to myself.
My duties were to be restricted to it; and hence another gentleman was to be appointed, in my place, to the Chair of Mathematics in the college. I was to have two European, and the necessary number of native, assistants. The observatory was to comprehend within its walls, my own residence as well as the lecture-room, a small library, and a laboratory, and a small printing press, and a mechanical
